Description

Re-Using Contaminated Land is a focused one-day educational conference bringing together those involved in returning contaminated properties to productive use, including developers, clean-up professionals, environmental regulators, and others involved in this process. The content focuses on the special challenges involved in redeveloping contaminated properties, with the goal of helping make transactions happen.

- Private Developer Perspectives
- Public Sector Strategies
- Cleanup Technologies & Approaches

Target Audience

- Property owners, project developers, lenders & investors
- Environmental & civil engineers
- Consultants, attorneys & other service providers
- Construction firms
- Government regulatory & permitting agencies

Why They Will Attend

- Increase understanding of:
 - Relative roles, needs, and priorities of parties involved in these transactions.
 - Technical aspects and choices involved in property cleanup.
 - Time, cost, and legal risks – and how to manage them.
- Learn who needs to be on the team – and how to work with each other.
- Meet and network with colleagues and potential partners.
